

Shiri Lavy

University of Haifa

Dr. Shiri Lavy is an organizational psychologist who received her PhD in psychology with distinction in 2006, from Bar-Ilan University in Israel. Following her post-doctoral work at the University of California in Davis, she was a faculty member at Ariel University, and then moved to the Department for Leadership and Policy in Education in Haifa University, where she currently works. Dr. Lavy's main interests are close relationships and character strengths (and their use), and her recent work focuses on their antecedents and implications in education organizations. These include work meaningfulness, positive emotions, teacher and student engagement, etc. She uses a variety of qualitative and quantitative research methods (i.e., experiments, daily-dairy studies, surveys, interviews) in her studies, and has several publications in high-quality journals of personality, positive psychology, organizational/occupational psychology, and education.
